Another examination was made on the 17th day of August last. It then appeared that the day succeeding the prior examination, (to wit, on the 31st day of July,) the sum of $7,500 in gold, a part of the specie of said bank exhibited to the commissioners, had been withdrawn, and delivered to Charles H. McClure, late cashier of said bank, and a receipt, of which the following is a copy, was left in the bank:

"Received of Bank of Clinton seven thousand five hundred dollars, in gold, which I agree to see returned in same coin, or in silver, without unnecessary delay.

"C. H. McCLURE.

"CLINTON, July 31, 1838."

The specie was taken by said McClure to Detroit, on the day last mentioned, and delivered to Lewis Godard, who gave his receipt for the same. The whole amount of specie remaining in bank at the time of said last examination was about $3,300.

A loan had been made by the bank, as appeared on such examination, of $16,000, to Jira Payne and Charles H. McClure, directors of the bank, for which two certificates of stock in the "Miners' Bank" of Dubuque, for one hundred and sixty shares each, were hypothecated. No entry of said loan could be found on the books of the bank, and no evidence of debt was
