

FREE BANKS.

The annexed tables show that there are nineteen banks doing business under the general banking law, with at least fifty thousand dollars worth of securities at the market value in New York—five banks that are voluntarily winding up and redeeming their circulation with securities remaining in this department, and nine banks which have withdrawn their securities and given bond for the redemption of their general banking law of 1855.

$85,899

In the latter part of October the free banks owning securities which had depreciated five per cent., were called upon to deposit additional securities or retire a portion of their circulation, as required by the general banking law. This call was promptly responded to by all the banks except the Bloomington Bank, as will be seen by an examination of the tables in this report. The general banking law directs the Auditor of State to withhold the interest due to any bank upon a failure to respond to his call for additional securities, but does not authorize him to wind up such a bank until its notes shall be protested for non-payment.

Since my last report there have been two banks regularly organized under the general banking law, the Exchange Bank of Attica, and the Boone county Bank, with an aggregate circulation of $91,217, State.

For later information concerning the Bloomington Bank and the Boone county Bank, see last part of this report.

*Except the Bloomington Bank.
